CENTRAL PARK LOVE SONG

by Stephen Wolf

Stephen Wolf's Central Park Love Song is both an intimate portrait and meticulous research of America's first great public park and the most visited site in New York City.

June 21, 2018 | Santa Monica, CA — It is no secret that Stephen Wolf has a deep affection for New York City. In his latest work, CENTRAL PARK LOVE SONG, Wolf captivates his audience by uncovering the most visit attraction in NYC in a way like never before. Readers learn why the park is so large on an island so small, why it grows in the center of Manhattan, and what has been lost to the needs of an ever-changing city. These and other stories weave through the narrative as the reader and narrator discover every cave and cranny of the park's 843 acres.

“This book about an enduring enchantment with place will resonate with all who find in the city's green heart a special world of their own.”

- Elizabeth Barlow Rogers, author of The Green Metropolis, first president of the Central Park Conservancy, 1980-1996.

“Stephen Wolf loves the city & its green sanctuary as Frank O'Hara did its streets... Everywhere you look there is wonder & beauty & the everyday real people who populate the place. Along the way, wandering beneath the heaventrees, you will most certainly fall in love.”

- Kevin Coval, author of This is Modern Art, editor of The Breakbeat Poets.

Central Park Love Song: Wander Beneath the Heaventrees published by Griffith Moon is available through Amazon, Barnes and Noble and Independent Booksellers June 1, 2018.

Stephen Wolf, PhD - Born in Chicago and with a doctorate from the University of Illinois, Stephen Wolf moved to the Lower East Side in 1977, blocks from where his grandparents once lived. His fiction has appeared in Playboy, Ploughshares, and the anthology American Families, and his story cycle Intimate Articles, was published by Ten Speed Press. He teaches literature and the humanities at Berkeley College in New York City.
